NEW QUESTION: 2Scenario: A Citrix Architect must perform a Provisioning Services (PVS) design for a healthcare organization. The initial design places all PVS farm components in the organization's primary datacenter. The customer asks whether the vDisk can be streamed from PVS servers in the primary datacenter to target devices located in a secondary datacenter in another region while maintaining good performance. The datacenters are connected with a 10 GB link with approximately 20 ms of latency. The architect recommends against the organization pursuing this approach. Which statement is a relevant reason for the recommendation?A. The configuration does NOT provide sufficient bandwidth for streaming traffic.B. This configuration would include too much latency for the streaming traffic.C. This configuration prevents the Subnet Affinity feature from being implemented.D. This configuration does NOT provide sufficient connectivity between the PVS servers and the farm databaseAnswer: DExplanation:<https://support.citrix.com/article/CTX220651>If having a global PVS Farm across data centers is required, Citrix recommends additional testing to confirm network performance and reliability, this is especially relevant for networks with higher latency (>15ms). If reliability and performance cannot be guaranteed then it is best to implement multiple PVS farms with local SQL databases for optimal performance and reliability.
