NEW QUESTION: 1 Which of the following is NOT an advantage of a stream cipher? A. It is amenable to hardware implementations that result in higher speeds. B. The same equipment can be used for encryption and decryption. C. The receiver and transmitter must be synchronized. D. Since encryption takes place bit by bit, there is no error propagation. Answer: C
Explanation: The transmitter and receiver must be synchronized since they must use the same keystream bits for the same bits of the text that are to be enciphered and deciphered. Usually, synchronizing frames must be sent to effect the synchronization and, thus, additional overhead is required for the transmissions. * Answer "The same equipment can be used for encryption and decryption" describes an advantage since stream ciphers commonly use Linear Feedback Shift Registers (LFSRs) to generate the keystream and use XORs to operate on the plaintext input stream. Because of the characteristics of the XOR, the same XOR gates and LFSRs can also decrypt the message. Since LFSRs and XORs are used in a stream cipher to encrypt and decrypt, these components are amenable to hardware implementation, which means higher speeds of operation. Thus, answer "It is amenable to hardware implementations that result in higher speeds" describes an advantage. For answer "Since encryption takes place bit by bit, there is no error propagation", stream ciphers encrypt individual bits with no feedback of the generated ciphertext bits and, therefore, errors do not propagate.

NEW QUESTION: 2 You set up two network channels for server-to-server communication. You want channel x to be used more than channel Y, so you give channel x a higher channel Weight. You want to see if indeed channel X is used more. You use the administration console and look at both channels under each one's Monitoring tab. What scenario would best assure you that channel x has an overall higher connection rate? A. Channel X Connections is higher. B. Channel X Accept Count is higher. C. Channel X Bytes Sent is higher. D. Channel X Bytes Received is higher. Answer: A
