its branches, and if local regeneration is required, which of the following devices is most cost-effective for the branch?A. U1930B. U1981C. U1960D. U1911Answer: D

NEW QUESTION: 4Which two statements are true about route leaking in a Level 1-Level 2 network environment? (Choose two.)A. Level 2 external routes are leaked into Level 1 without a policy if the wide-metrics parameter is configured.B. Level 1 internal routes can be leaked into Level 2, but require a policy.C. Level 1 external routes are leaked into Level 2 without a policy if the wide-metrics parameter is configured.D. Level 2 internal routes can be leaked into Level 1, but require a policy.*Answer: C,D*Explanation:B: Normally, IS-IS metrics can have values up to 63. The total cost to a destination is the sum of the metrics on all outgoing interfaces along a particular path from the source to the destination. By default, the total path metric is limited to 1023. This metric value is insufficient for large networks and provides too little granularity for traffic engineering, especially with high-bandwidth links. A wider range of metrics is also required if route leaking is used.C: By default, IS-IS protocol leaks routing information from a Level 1 area to a Level 2 area.However, to leak routing information from a Level 2 area to a Level 1 area, an export policy must be explicitly configured.References:
