NEW QUESTION: 1Forward downstream integration most likely:A. Allows the firm to protect its proprietary knowledge from suppliers.B. Improves access to information about demand.C. May allow the firm's subunit(s) to maintain constant production rates while external parties bear the risk of fluctuations.D. Implies that the firm can fully support an efficient subunit but has additional needs to be met in the market.Answer: B*Explanation:A strategic advantage of forward integration is that access to market information is improved. A forward subunit (the demand leading stage) controls the amount and mix of demand to be satisfied upstream. At the very least, forward integration improves the timeliness of (1) demand information, (2) production planning, (3) inventory control, and (4) the costs of being under- or over-stocked. It also may provide information about changing tastes, competitors' moves, and the ideal mix of products.
