NEW QUESTION: 3 Which IBM Spectrum Protect parameter is considered to improve network performance during backups?
A. TXNGROUPMAX on the client
B. TCPNODELAY on the client
C. TCPWINDOWSIZE on the server
D. TXNBYTELIMIT on the server
Answer: C
Explanation:
Explanation/Reference: Explanation: Typically the default value for the TCPWINDOWSIZE option works well. A larger window might improve communication performance, especially on fast networks with high latency, such as a long-distance wide area network (WAN) connection.
Incorrect Answers: A, B: When you are writing to a tape drive, the drive normally returns control to the application when the data is in the tape drive buffer but before the data is written to tape. This mode of operation provides all tape drives a significant performance improvement. However, the drive's buffer is volatile. For the application to ensure that the data is written to tape, the application must flush the buffer. Flushing the buffer causes the tape drive to back hitch (start/stop). The IBM Spectrum Protect parameters TXNBYTELIMIT and TXNGROUPMAX control how frequently IBM Spectrum Protect issues this buffer flush command.
