NEW QUESTION: 110 months ago, a firm had leased a downtown office for $5,000 per month. The lease runs for the next 2.5 years. The current office space of similar size rents at $4,000 per month. If the firm uses the space exclusively for a project over the next 6 months, the opportunity cost related to this equals _____.
A. insufficient information
B. $5,000 per month
C. $4,000 per month
D. zero
Answer: C
Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Explanation: Opportunity cost is based on current market cost. It does not matter what the firm originally paid or agreed to pay for the property in question. Of course, since taxes are based on actual costs, the after tax opportunity cost is definitely affected by historical contracts currently in force.

NEW QUESTION: 2 Your company has three Active Directory domains in a single forest. You install a new Active Directory enabled application. The application adds new user attributes to the Active Directory schema. You discover that the Active Directory replication traffic to the Global Catalogs has increased. You need to prevent the new attributes from being replicated to the Global Catalog. You must achieve this goal without affecting application functionality. What should you do?
A. Make the new attributes in the Active Directory as defunct.
B. Modify the properties in the Active Directory schema for the new attributes.
C. Change the cost for the DEFAULTIPSITELINK object to 9990.
D. Change the replication interval for the DEFAULTIPSITELINK object to 9990.
Answer: B
Explanation:
<http://support.microsoft.com/kb/248717> How to Modify Attributes That Replicate to the Global Catalog The Global Catalog (GC) contains a partial replica of every object in the enterprise. This article discusses how to manipulate the attributes which make up the set values replicated to the GC. Deciding which attributes will replicate (in addition to the default attributes) requires careful planning with consideration for network traffic and necessary disk space. Before describing how to set an attribute to replicate in the GC, it is important to note the effects this has on network replication traffic. After an attributeSchema object is created, marking an additional attribute to replicate to the GC causes a full replication (also known as a "full sync") of all objects to the GC as described below. This behavior occurs on the versions of Windows

2000 listed in this article. Every server has a full and write-able copy of its own domain. If that server is also a GC, the remaining domains in the forest are held as read-only, partial copies. "Partial" means that only a subset of the attributes is kept. When an attribute is added to the GC, it is added to the partial copy subset (partial attribute set). This causes the GC to perform a "full sync" of all the read-only copies again to repopulate itself with only the partial attributes that it needs to hold. This full sync occurs even if the attribute property `isMemberOfPartialAttributeSet` is set to "True." Thus, it only does a full sync on the read-only partial copy domains and not its own write-able domain, the configuration directory partition or schema directory partition. In order to modify the attributes that replicate to the Active Directory GC, you must modify the schema. To modify the schema, an administrator must be made a member of the "Schema Admins" group. In addition to being a member of this group, a registry key must be set on the Schema master.
