NEW QUESTION: 2 A customer is deploying VoLTE and complains about high voice drop rates and voice quality degradation at the cell edge in most LTE cells in the area. The network has a dense WCDMA coverage on the 700 MHz band and patchy LTE coverage on the 2100 MHz band. Which two features would you activate to solve this problem? (Choose two.) A. SRVCC Handover to UTRAN B. 256 QAM DL C. DRXD D. TTI Bundling Answer: A,D

NEW QUESTION: 3 Which statement is a restriction associated with the use of instant clones? A. Transparent Page Sharing is not compatible. B. 3D rendering is not available. C. App Volumes is not compatible. D. vMotion is not available. Answer: D

NEW QUESTION: 4 An enterprise must ensure that all devices that connect to its networks have been previously approved. The solution must support dual factor mutual authentication with strong identity assurance. In order to reduce costs and administrative overhead, the security architect wants to outsource identity proofing and second factor digital delivery to the third party. Which of the following solutions will address the enterprise requirements? A. Implementing federated network access with the third party. B. Using a VPN concentrator which supports dual factor via hardware tokens. C. Using a HSM at the network perimeter to handle network device access. D. Implementing 802.1X with EAP-TLS across the infrastructure. Answer: D Explanation: IEEE 802.1X (also known as Dot1x) is an IEEE Standard for Port-based Network Access Control (PNAC). It is part of the IEEE 802.1 group of networking protocols. It provides an authentication mechanism to devices wishing to attach to a LAN or WLAN. 802.1X authentication involves three parties: a supplicant, an authenticator, and an authentication server. The supplicant is a client device (such as a laptop) that wishes to attach to the LAN/WLAN - though the term 'supplicant' is also used interchangeably to refer to the software running on the client that provides credentials to the authenticator. The authenticator is a network device, such as an Ethernet switch or wireless access point; and the authentication server is typically a host running software supporting the RADIUS and EAP protocols. The authenticator acts like a security guard to a protected network. The supplicant (i.e., client device) is not allowed access through the authenticator to the protected side of the network until the supplicant's identity has been validated and authorized. An analogy to this is providing a valid visa at the airport's arrival immigration before being allowed to enter the country. With 802.1X port-based authentication, the supplicant provides credentials, such as user name/password or digital certificate, to the authenticator, and the authenticator forwards the credentials to the authentication server for verification. If the authentication server determines the credentials are valid, the supplicant (client device) is allowed to access resources located on the protected side of the network. EAP-TLS (Tunneled Transport Layer Security) is designed to provide authentication that is as strong as EAP-TLS, but it does not require that each user be issued a certificate. Instead, only the authentication servers are issued certificates. User authentication is performed by password, but the password credentials are transported in a securely encrypted tunnel established based upon the server certificates. Incorrect Answers: A: Federated network access provides user access to networks by using a single logon. The logon is authenticated by a party that is trusted to all the networks. It does not ensure that all devices that connect to its networks have been previously approved. B: A hardware security module (HSM) is a physical computing device that safeguards and manages digital keys for strong authentication and provides cryptoprocessing. It does not ensure that all devices that connect to its networks have been previously approved. C: A VPN concentrator provides VPN connections and is typically used for creating site-to-site VPN architectures. It does not ensure that all devices that connect to its networks have been previously approved. References: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/IEEE_802.1X
