NEW QUESTION: 3Which of the following is not a two-factor authentication mechanism?A. Something you do and a password.B. Something you have and something you know.C. A smartcard and something you are.D. Something you know and a password.Answer: D
Explanation:Something you know and a password fits within only one of the three ways authentication could be done. A password is an example of something you know, thereby something you know and a password does not constitute a two-factor authentication as both are in the same category of factors.A two-factor (strong) authentication relies on two different kinds of authentication factorsout of a list of three possible choice:something you know (e.g. a PIN or password),something you have (e.g. a smart card, token, magnetic card),something you are is mostly Biometrics (e.g. a fingerprint) or something you do (e.g.signature dynamics).TIP FROM CLEMENT:On the real exam you can expect to see synonyms and sometimes sub-categories underthe main categories. People are familiar with Pin, Passphrase, Password as subset ofSomething you know.However, when people see choices such as Something you do or Something you are theyimmediately get confused and they do not think of them as subset of Biometrics where youhave Biometric implementation based on behavior and physilogical attributes. Sosomething you do falls under the Something you are category as a subset.

Something you do would be signing your name or typing text on your keyboard for example. Strong authentication is simply when you make use of two factors that are within two different categories. Reference(s) used for this question: Shon Harris, CISSP All In One, Fifth Edition, pages 158-159
