NEW QUESTION: 3 Due to compliance regulations, a company requires a yearly penetration test. The Chief Information Security Officer (CISO) has asked that it be done under a black box methodology. Which of the following would be the advantage of conducting this kind of penetration test? A. The results should reflect what attackers may be able to learn about the company. B. The results will show an in-depth view of the network and should help pin-point areas of internal weakness. C. Using documentation provided to them, the pen-test organization can quickly determine areas to focus on. D. The risk of unplanned server outages is reduced. Answer: A Explanation: A black box penetration test is usually done when you do not have access to the code, much the same like an outsider/attacker. This is then the best way to run a penetration test that will also reflect what an attacker/outsider can learn about the company. A black box test simulates an outsiders attack.
