NEW QUESTION: 3You manage Hyper-V host servers and virtual machines (VMs) by using Microsoft System Center Virtual Machine Manager (VMM) 2008 R2. You grant a user the Delegated Administrator user role. You need to provide the user with the ability to manage VMs through the VMM Self-Service Portal. What should you do?A. Enable the Single sign-on for Terminal Services option for the VMM Self-Service Portal.B. Enable the Integrated Windows Authentication option for the VMM Self-Service Portal.C. In VMM, grant the user the Administrator user role.D. In VMM, grant the user the Self-Service user role.Answer: D
Explanation: Explanation/Reference: In virtual machine self-service, a virtual machine has an owner (by default, the user who created the virtual machine) and a self-service user role (by default, the self-service user role under which the virtual machine was created). The virtual machine's owner is the only person who can see and perform operations on a virtual machine in the VMM Self-Service Portal. A self-service user can change the owner of his own virtual machine to any other member of the self-service user role. If the owner is a member of more than one self-service user role, the user can change the virtual machine owner to any member of his other roles if the following requirements are met: The current owner must belong to the self-service user role that is being assigned. The virtual machine must be within the scope (host or library path) of that user role. Delegated Administrator role - Members of a role based on the Delegated Administrator profile have full VMM administrator rights, with a few exceptions, on all objects in the scope defined by the host groups and library that are assigned to the role. A delegated administrator cannot modify VMM settings or add or remove members of the Administrator role. Self-Service User role - Members of a role based on the Self-Service User profile can manage their own virtual machines within a restricted environment. Self-service users use the VMM Self-Service Web Portal to manage their virtual machines. The portal provides a simplified view of only the virtual machines that the user owns and the operations that the user is allowed to perform on them. A self-service user role specifies the operations that members can perform on their own virtual machines (these can include creating virtual machines) and the templates and ISO image files that they can use to create virtual machines. The user role also can place a quota on the virtual machines that a user can deploy at any one time. Self-service users' virtual machines are deployed transparently on the most suitable host in the host group that is assigned to the user role.
