NEW QUESTION: 3 Which three modes are valid PfR monitoring modes of operation? (Choose three.)A. fast mode (based on Cisco IP SLA probes)B. route monitor mode (based on BGP route changes)C. passive mode (based on NetFlow data)D. active mode (based on Cisco IP SLA probes)E. passive mode (based on Cisco IP SLA probes)F. RMON mode (based on RMONv1 and RMONv2 data)Answer: A,C,D
Explanation: Modes are: Mode monitor passive
Passive monitoring is the act of PfR gathering information on user packets assembled into flows by Netflow. Passive monitoring is typically only recommended in Internet edge deployments because active probing is ineffective because of security policies that block probing. PfR, when enabled, automatically enables Netflow on the managed interfaces on the Border Routers. By aggregating this information on the Border Routers and periodically reporting the collected data to the Master Controller, the network prefixes and applications in use can automatically be learned.
Mode monitor active
Active monitoring is the act of generating Cisco IOS IP Service Level Agreements (SLAs) probes to generate test traffic for the purpose of obtaining information regarding the characteristics of the WAN links. PfR can either implicitly generate active probes when passive monitoring has identified destination hosts, or the network manager can explicitly configure probes in the PfR configuration. When jitter probes are used (common use case), Target Discovery is used to learn the respond address and to automatically generate the probes.
Mode monitor Fast
This mode generates active probes through all exists continuously at the configured probe frequency. This differs from either active or both modes in that these modes only generate probes through alternate paths (exits) in the event the current path is out-of-policy.
