NEW QUESTION: 3Which of the following projects would likely produce multiple Internal Rates of Return? Assume a 14% discount rate. Project A initial investment outlay: ($500,000) t1: $900,000 t2: ($100,000) t3: ($100,000) t4: ($10,000) Project B initial investment outlay: ($500,000) t1: $0.00 t2: $650,000 Project C initial investment outlay: ($50,000) t1: $0.00 t2: $0.00 t3: $65,000 t4: $0.00 t5: $0.00 t6: $65,000 Project D initial investment outlay: ($1,000,000) t1: $675,000 t2: $675,000 t3: ($1,500) t4: $1,500 Project E initial investment outlay: ($1,000,000) t1: $0.00 t2: $0.00 t3: $0.00 t4: $0.00 t5: $2,000,000 A. Project B B. Project A and D C. All of these projects will likely result in multiple Internal Rates of Return. D. Project A, D, and E E. Project A F. Project C Answer: B Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Explanation: First of all, the cost of capital is irrelevant in Internal Rate of Return calculations. What is being examined in this example is the determination of "normal" versus "non-normal" projects. Non-normal projects are classified as projects that possess non-normal cash flows. In evaluating projects with "non-normal cash flows" the Internal Rate of Return method will often produce multiple IRRs which leads to an incorrect accept/reject decision. Non-normal cash flows are defined as cash flows in which the sign changes more than once. Projects A and D involve cash outflows superimposed within their cash inflows, resulting in a sign change from positive to negative and negative to positive. In examining projects such as this, it is advisable to use either the NPV or MIRR methods, which are not subject to the problem of multiple IRRs. From observation alone, we can determine that project A and D are non-normal projects, and are thus likely to result in multiple IRR calculations. While project B, C and E have periods of zero cash flows, each only has one change of sign in the overall cash flow process, and therefore all three projects should be characterized as "normal" for purposes of examination. While the cost of capital has been provided, it is not necessary for the determination of the correct answer in this case. What you should look for are projects with non-normal cash flows, and this should not involve any computational analysis. Besides, the cost of capital is not incorporated into the Internal Rate of Return calculation, rather, it is a component of the NPV and MIRR computational methods.
