NEW QUESTION: 4Refer to the exhibit. Why is the 140.140.0.0 network not used as the gateway of last resort even though it is configured first?A. Default-network selection will always prefer the statement with the lowest IP address.B. The last default-network statement will always be preferred.C. A router will load balance across multiple default-networks; repeatedly issuing the show ip route command would show the gateway of last resort changing between the two networks.D. A route to the 140.140.0.0 network does not exist in the routing table.Answer: D
Explanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:In the routing table of R3, we can only see the route 130.130.0.0/16 is learned via EIGRP (marked with D) and is being chosen as the "Gateway of last resort".The route to 140.140.0.0 is not present in the routing table so the command "ip default-network140.140.0.0" has no effect.Remember that a route must appear in the routing table (via static route or learned via a routing protocol before it can be set as "Gateway of last resort" by the "ip default-network" command.
