NEW QUESTION: 3 Which three statements are true about persistent lightweight jobs? A. They generate large amounts of metadata. B. They are useful when users need to create a large number of jobs quickly. C. A user cannot set privileges on them. D. They may be created as fully self-contained jobs. E. They must reference an existing Scheduler Program. Answer: B,C,E Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Explanation: Unlike regular jobs, they are not schema objects. Because lightweight jobs are not schema objects, you cannot grant privileges on them. A lightweight job inherits privileges from its specified program. Thus, any user who has a certain set of privileges on the program has corresponding privileges on the lightweight job. Use lightweight jobs when you have many short-duration jobs that run frequently. Under certain circumstances, using lightweight jobs can deliver a small performance gain. A lightweight job must reference a program object (program) to specify a job action. The program must be already enabled when the lightweight job is created, and the program type must be either 'PLSQL_BLOCK' or 'STORED_PROCEDURE'.
