NEW QUESTION: 1How can REST API commands be run to manage and monitor an XtremIO cluster?A. From the REST API CLI built into each X-BrickB. From the REST API GUI built into each X-BrickC. From the REST API tab in the XMS GUIDD. From a third-party GUIAnswer: D
Explanation:The XtremIO's RESTful API allows HTTPS-based interface for automation, orchestration, query and provisioning of the system. With the API, third party applications can be used to control and fully administer the array. Normally you would access the API using some form of programming/scripting language, such as Python or Perl. However for the purposes of learning or testing concepts there are a number of tools that work better, such as HTTPRequester and curl.* Curl is a command-line tool that exists in all Linux distributions, and is available for most other Unix OSes as well as Windows. To use curl to access XtremIO you'll need to pass it a few options, such as the username/password to access the array (any valid account on the XtremIO XMS will work), the URL of the API, and potentially a few options such as -k to tell curl not to validate the SSL certificate (presuming you don't have a valid certificate installed), and -s (silent) to stop curl displaying it's progress as it downloads the response.* HTTPRequester is a browser extension that is available for both Chrome and Firefox. As with for curl, you'll need to provide a username/password, which is done by clicking on the "Authentication..." box, which adds two boxes below the URL for the username and the password. Explanation:The dataset have 1500 rows, if you don't enable the column profiling for the entire dataset, the column profiling will be only based on top 1000 rows. So first enable for entire dataset and after that run column profiling for the entire dataset.
