NEW QUESTION: 2The introduction of a tariff is expected to:A. decrease the quantity of competing goods produced by domestic firms.B. increase the price of the imported good and the domestic competing good.C. decrease the price of domestic competing goods.Answer: B
Explanation:A tariff shifts the supply of the imported good to the left, increasing its price and reducing quantity sold. It also has the effect of increasing (NOT decreasing) the price of domestic competing goods and increasing the quantity of competing goods produced by domestic firms.

NEW QUESTION: 3Click the Exhibit button.You are planning to replace Cisco distribution layer switches with HP A-Series switches, and you are selecting a general strategy for the migration process. The strategy you select is to connect the new switches in parallel to the existing network. You will move the edge switch connections to the new distribution switches during the migration, as shown in the exhibitWhat is a disadvantage of this strategy?A. You must disable Spanning Tree on all edge switches until you have finished migrating edge switches' connections to the new distribution switches, which might introduce temporary broadcast storms.B. You must migrate the routing functionality for every VLAN simultaneously, so you cannot assess how the migration is working for a single VLAN before completing the migration.C. This approach requires you to shut down the network for at least several hours, because of the network size.D. The connection between the existing distribution switches and the parallel network might become a bottleneck during the migration process unless you plan sufficient bandwidth.Answer: D
