NEW QUESTION: 4 You have edited `/etc/profile` to include the lines:
`dennis_says=hello`
`export dennis_says`
You have also edited `/etc/skel/local.profile` to include the line:

You now create a new user account brian, and specify use of the bash shell. When brian logs in and enters `Echo $dennis_says` What will he see, and why?
A. hello, because the `local.profile` entry is not automatically sourced on login
B. hello, because the global `/etc/profile` entry overrides the `local.profile` entry
C. nothing, because the variable was not exported in `local.profile`
D. hello, because the value specified in `local.profile` was not exported
E. world, because the `local.profile` entry will be executed last
Answer: E
Explanation: The `$HOME/.profile` file is an initialization file that is executed after the `/etc/profile` when logging in to the Bourne or Korn shell. The file contains user preferences for variable settings. If the `ENV` variable is set to `.kshrc`, the `.kshrc` file executes every time a new shell begins execution. The `$HOME/.profile` is copied from the `/etc/skel/local.profile` file by the Administration Tool when creating a new account.
Note: `/etc/skel/local.profile` Per-system configuration file for sh/ksh/ksh93/bash login sessions, installed for new users
