NEW QUESTION: 3A user has two EC2 instances running in two separate regions. The user is running an internal memory management tool, which captures the data and sends it to CloudWatch in US East, using a CLI with the same namespace and metric. Which of the below mentioned options is true with respect to the above statement?A. CloudWatch will give an error since the data will conflict due to two sourcesB. CloudWatch will take the data of the server, which sends the data firstC. The setup will not work as CloudWatch cannot receive data across regionsD. CloudWatch will receive and aggregate the data based on the namespace and metricAnswer: D Explanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:Amazon CloudWatch does not differentiate the source of a metric when receiving custom data. If the user is publishing a metric with the same namespace and dimensions from different sources, CloudWatch will treat them as a single metric. If the data is coming with the same timezone within a minute, CloudWatch will aggregate the data. It treats these as a single metric, allowing the user to get the statistics, such as minimum, maximum, average, and the sum of all across all servers.
