NEW QUESTION: 3You have just recompiled a new kernel and rebooted your system with the new kernel. Unfortunately you are getting "Can't locate module" error messages. Which of the following is most likely to be the source of the problem?A. You copied the modules to the wrong directory.B. You did not configure modular support into the kernel.C. You did not run depmod after installing the modules.D. You did not install the modules.Answer: B*Explanation: There is one more step needed for the build process, however. You have created the kernel, but now you need to create all the loadable modules if you have them configured. Be aware that typical distribution kernels tend to have almost every feature installed, plus a few others for good measure. These can typically take an hour or so to build on our Athlon XP1800. The stock kernels are somewhat leaner by default and take, on average, 25 minutes to compile. To build the modules we run: $ make modules If you forget to enter make modules command, you will get that message. Follow these steps while recompile the kernel. Installation steps
