NEW QUESTION: 4 NO: 208 In your SSIS solution, you need to load a large set of rows into the database as quickly as possible. The rows are stored in a delimited text file, and only one source column needs its data type converted from String (used by the source column) to Decimal (used by the destination column). What control flow task would be most suitable for this operation?A. No single control flow task can be used for this operation, because the data needs to be extracted from the source file, transformed, and then loaded into the destination table. At least three different tasks would have to be used--the Bulk Insert task to load the data into a staging database, a Data Conversion task to convert the data appropriately, and finally, an Execute SQL task to merge the transformed data with existing destination data.B. The File System task would be perfect in this case, because it can read data from files and can be configured to handle data type conversions.C. The Bulk Insert task would be the most appropriate, because it is the quickest and can handle data type conversions.D. The data flow task would have to be used, because the data needs to be transformed before it can be loaded into the table.Answer: D
