NEW QUESTION: 3A. Option A*B. Option D*C. Option F*D. Option B*E. Option C*F. Option E*Answer: C,D,E*Explanation: Flashback Database uses its own logging mechanism, creating flashback logs and storing them in the fast recovery area (C). You can only use Flashback Database if flashback logs are available. To take advantage of this feature, you must set up your database in advance to create flashback logs.* To enable Flashback Database, you configure a fast recovery area and set a flashback retention target. This retention target specifies how far back you can rewind a database with Flashback Database.From that time onwards, at regular intervals, the database copies images of each altered block in every data file into the flashback logs. These block images can later be reused to reconstruct the data file contents for any moment at which logs were captured. (F)Incorrect: Not E: You cannot use Flashback Database alone to retrieve a dropped data file. If you flash back a database to a time when a dropped data file existed in the database, only the data file entry is added to the control file. You can only recover the dropped data file by using RMAN to fully restore and recover the data file. Reference: Oracle Database Backup and Recovery User's Guide 12c R
