NEW QUESTION: 1Which type of device can be replaced by the use of subinterfaces for VLAN routing?A. Layer 2 bridgeB. Layer 2 switchC. Layer 3 switchD. routerAnswer: D*Explanation:The only way to get off a layer two network segment is through a layer three device; commonly referred to as a Default Gateway for host machines. So let's say for example you have a single switch with 5 different VLAN's and machines on each VLAN; in which case each VLAN would require its own router to get out of that layer two network to a different layer two network. A Sub-Interface is a logical interface partitioned off from a physical interface. A sub-interface allows you to have multiple interface configurations on a single physical interface. In this lab you'll use sub-interfaces to match the VLAN's in the trunk to allow for interfaces in each VLAN and accomplish inter-vlan routing for the hosts as the router has an interface in each layer three network.
