NEW QUESTION: 1 Which calculation computes the EIRP of an antenna?
A. $EIRP = \text{Antenna Gain (dBi)} - \text{Cable Loss (dB)} * \text{Tx power (dBm)}$
B. $EIRP = \text{Tx power (dBm)} * \text{Antenna Gain (dBi)} / \text{Cable Loss (dB)}$
C. $EIRP = \text{Cable Loss (dB)} + \text{Antenna Gain (dBi)} / \text{Tx power (dBm)}$
D. $EIRP = \text{Tx power (dBm)} + \text{Antenna Gain (dBi)} - \text{Cable Loss (dB)}$
E. $EIRP = \text{Tx power (dBm)} + \text{Antenna Gain (dBi)} / \text{Cable Loss (dB)}$
F. $EIRP = \text{Cable Loss (dB)} + \text{Antenna Gain (dBi)} - \text{Tx power (dBm)}$
Answer: D
Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Explanation: EIRP (Effective Isotropic Radiated Power) EIRP (Effective Isotropic Radiated Power) is the actual amount of signal leaving the antenna and is a value measured in db and is based on 3 values: a) Transmit Power (dBm) b) Cable Loss (dB) c) Antenna Gain (dBi) The dB measures the power of a signal as a function of its ratio to another standardized value. The abbreviation dB is often combined with other abbreviations in order to represent the values that are compared. Here are two examples: dBm -- The dB value is compared to 1 mW. dBw -- The dB value is compared to 1 W. You can calculate the power in dBs from this formula: $\text{Power (in dB)} = 10 * \log_{10} (\text{Signal/Reference})$ This list defines the terms in the formula: log10 is logarithm base 10. Signal is the power of the signal (for example, 50 mW). Reference is the reference power (for example, 1 mW). How to find EIRP To determine EIRP follow this equation: $\text{Transmit Power} - \text{Cable Loss} + \text{Antenna Gain} = \text{EIRP}$
