NEW QUESTION: 1A solution designer is creating the data model for a system that will be used by an online store. The item type that will be used to store orders will require attributes for the customer's billing as well as shipping address, since they could be different. Most of the attributes are the same for both addresses: two address lines, and city, state and zip code attributes. The IBM Content Manager system will be connected to an existing payment processing system which will use the customer's billing address, as well as a warehouse system that uses the shipping address. The payment system uses a city field that has a length of 24 characters, while the warehouse system's city field is 32 characters. How should the solution designer define the attribute for city?A. Create 1 attribute for the city. CITY, and 2 attribute groups for the addresses. BILLING with CITY length of 24 and SHIPPING with CITY length of 32B. Create 1 attribute for the city. CITY with a length of 24 and use it in the billing addresses, then change the attribute length to 32 characters in the system administration client and use it in the shipping address.C. Create 2 attributes for the city, BILLING_CITY with a length of 24 and SHIPPING_CITY with a length of 32 and use them in the appropriate addresses.D. Create 1 attribute for the city. CITY with a length of 32 and use it in both billing and shipping addresses.
