NEW QUESTION: 2A female client who has chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) has presented in the emergency department with cough productive of yellow sputum and increasing shortness of breath. On room air, her blood gases are as follows: pH 7.30 mm Hg, PCO₂ 60 mm Hg, PO₂ 55 mm Hg, HCO₃ 32 mEq/L. These arterial blood gases reflect:A. Compensated respiratory acidosisB. Uncompensated metabolic acidosisC. Uncompensated respiratory acidosisD. Normal blood gasesAnswer: CExplanation:Explanation(A) In compensated respiratory acidosis, the pH level is normal, the PCO₂ level is elevated, and the HCO₃ level is elevated. The client's primary alteration is an inability to remove CO₂ from the lungs, so over time, the kidneys increase reabsorption of HCO₃ to buffer the CO₂. (B) Normal ranges for arterial blood gases for adults and children are as follows: pH 7.35-7.45, PO₂ 80-100 mm Hg, PCO₂ 35-45 mm Hg, HCO₃ 21-28 mEq/L. (C) In uncompensated metabolic acidosis the pH level is decreased, the PCO₂ level is normal, and the HCO₃ level is decreased. The client's primary alteration is an inability to remove excess acid via the kidneys. The lungs are unable to clear the increased acid. (D) In uncompensated respiratory acidosis, the pH level is decreased, the PCO₂ level is increased, and the HCO₃ level is normal. In a person with long-standing COPD, the HCO₃ level will rise gradually over time to compensate for the gradually increasing PCO₂, and the person's pH level will be normal. When a person with COPD becomes acutely ill, the kidneys do not have time to increase the reabsorption of HCO₃, so the person's pH level will reflect acidosis even though the HCO₃ is elevated.
