NEW QUESTION: 2 Oracle Functionsの認証を自動的に処理するのはどれですか？
A. 署名されたHTTPリクエスト
B. FnプロジェクトCLI
C. Oracle Cloud Infrastructure CLI
D. cURL
E. Oracle Cloud Infrastructure SDK
Answer: B, C
Explanation: Explanation If you use the Fn Project CLI or the Oracle Cloud Infrastructure CLI to invoke a function, authentication is handled for you. See Using the Fn Project CLI to Invoke Functions and Using the Oracle Cloud Infrastructure CLI to Invoke Functions. If you use an Oracle Cloud Infrastructure SDK to invoke a function, you can use the SDK to handle authentication. See Using SDKs to Invoke Functions. If you make a signed HTTP request to a function's invoke endpoint, you'll have to handle authentication yourself by including a signature and the OCID of the compartment to which the function belongs in the request header Fn Project CLI you can create an Fn Project CLI Context to Connect to Oracle Cloud Infrastructure and specify --provider oracle This option enables Oracle Functions to perform authentication and authorization using Oracle Cloud Infrastructure request signing, private keys, user groups, and policies that grant permissions to those user groups.

NEW QUESTION: 3 One year into a five-year project, the project manager realizes that the reason for high team turnover is that the team does not receive the same financial allowances as other teams that are working on the same project The project manager forecasts that with this high staff turnover rate, the project will suffer a two-and-a-half-year delay. The amount to cover additional disbursements was not included in the contract, and the project sponsor is unwilling to renegotiate. What should the project manager do?
A. Request a schedule extension.
B. Pay disbursements using budget reserves.
C. Present a change request to reduce scope to the project sponsor
D. Escalate the problem to the organization's program or portfolio management office (PMO).
Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 4 Which two options best describe the purpose of session ID and cookie field in a L2TPv3 packet?
A. The session ID is a 32-bit locally significant field used to identify the call on the destination or egress tunnel endpoint. The session ID will be negotiated by the control connection or statically defined if using the L2TP v3 data plane only.
B. The cookie is a variable length (with a maximum of eight bytes), word-aligned optional field. The control connection can negotiate this as an additional level of guarantee beyond the regular session ID lookup to make sure that a data message has been directed to the correct session or that any recently reused session ID will not be misdirected.
C. The cookie is a 32-bit locally significant field used to identify the call on the destination or egress tunnel endpoint. The cookie will be negotiated by the control connection or statically defined if using the L2TPv3 data plane only.
D. The session ID is a variable length (with a maximum of eight bytes), word-aligned optional field. The control connection can negotiate this as an additional level of guarantee beyond the regular cookie lookup to make sure that a data message has been directed to the correct session or that any recently reused cookie will not be misdirected.
Answer: A,B
Explanation: Session ID: The 32-bit nonzero session ID carried in the data message header is used to associate incoming data messages with a particular local attachment circuit. Note that one L2TPv3 session corresponds to one pseudowire. Cookie: Following the session ID is an optional variable length random cookie value (maximum 64 bits). This cookie value can be used in addition to the session ID and adds an extra level of assurance that the incoming data messages are correctly associated with the local attachment circuit. Furthermore, a randomly chosen cookie provides protection against blind insertion attacks. That is, an attacker would find it very difficult, if not impossible, to insert packets into a data stream (pseudowire) if the attacker is unable to sniff packets transiting the network between peer LCCEs. This is because of the difficulty of guessing the correct cookie value (0 to 264 if the cookie is 64 bits in length).
