NEW QUESTION: 3 An application is generating a log file every 5 minutes. The log file is not critical but may be required only for verification in case of some major issue. The file should be accessible over the internet whenever required. Which of the below mentioned options is a best possible storage solution for it?
A. AWS Glacier B. AWS RRSC C. AWS S3 D. AWS RDS
Answer: B
Explanation: Amazon S3 stores objects according to their storage class. There are three major storage classes: Standard, Reduced Redundancy Storage and Glacier. Standard is for AWS S3 and provides very high durability. However, the costs are a little higher. Glacier is for archival and the files are not available over the internet. Reduced Redundancy Storage is for less critical files. Reduced Redundancy is little cheaper as it provides less durability in comparison to S3. In this case since the log files are not mission critical files, RRS will be a better option.

NEW QUESTION: 4 A company has a web application that uses an Amazon Cognito user pool for authentication. The company wants to create a login page with the company logo. What should a developer do to meet these requirements?
A. Create a login page with the company logo and upload it to Amazon Cognito B. Upload the logo to the Amazon Cognito app settings and point to the logo on a custom login page C. Create a login page in Amazon API Gateway with the logo and save the link in Amazon Cognito D. Create a hosted user interface in Amazon Cognito and customize it with the company logo
Answer: D
