NEW QUESTION: 1In which of the following businesses is the research and development department likely to be distinct from the marketing department?A. clothing manufacturerB. fertilizer manufacturerC. publisherD. toy manufacturerAnswer: B
Explanation:Explanation: In a fertilizer manufacturer, the research and development department is likely to be distinct from the marketing department. As a general rule, the more technologically sophisticated and complex the product, the greater distinction between the R&D and marketing departments. The development of useful and safe fertilizers requires a great deal of experimentation and technical knowledge. Therefore, it is more likely that a fertilizer manufacturer would have a special department for creating and refining products. For a toy manufacturer, publisher, or clothing manufacturer, product development is largely stimulated by the demands of the consumer, so it makes more sense for the marketing department to be loosely involved in research and development.
