Answer: D

Explanation: Explanation/Reference: DNS REPLICATION IN AD DS

You can store Domain Name System (DNS) zones in the domain or application directory partitions of Active Directory Domain Services (AD DS). A partition is a data structure in AD DS that distinguishes data for different replication purposes. All DNS servers in the forest that are domain controllers running Windows Server 2003 or Windows Server 2008: Replicates zone data to all Windows Server 2003 and Windows Server 2008 domain controllers running the DNS Server service in the AD DS forest. This option replicates zone data to the ForestDNSZones partition. Therefore, it provides the BROADEST replication scope (it fulfill the technical requirement: Minimize the amount of name resolution traffic from the branch offices to the DNS servers in the main office).

All DNS servers in the domain that are domain controllers running Windows Server 2003 or Windows Server 2008: Replicates zone data to all Windows Server 2003 and Windows Server 2008 domain controllers running the DNS Server service in the Active Directory domain. This option replicates zone data to the DomainDNSZone partition. It is the default setting for DNS zone replication in Windows Server 2003 and Windows Server 2008.

All domain controllers in the Active Directory domain: Replicates zone data to all domain controllers in the Active Directory domain. If you want Windows 2000 DNS servers to load an Active Directory-integrated zone, you must specify this scope for that zone.

All domain controllers in a specified application directory partition: Replicates zone data according to the replication scope of the specified application directory partition. For a zone to be stored in the specified application directory partition, the DNS server hosting the zone must be enlisted in the specified application directory partition. Use this scope when you want zone data to be replicated to domain controllers in multiple domains but you do not want the data to replicate to the entire forest.
