NEW QUESTION: 4The authenticator within Kerberos provides a requested service to the client after validating which of the following?A. client private keyB. server public keyC. timestampD. client public keyAnswer: C
Explanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:In Kerberos implementations where the use of an authenticator is configured, the user sends their identification information and a timestamp and sequence number encrypted with the shared session key to the requested service, which then decrypts this information and compares it with the identification data the KDC sent to it about this requesting user. If the data matches, the user is allowed access to the requested service. Incorrect Answers: B: A requested service is provided to the client after validating a user's identification information and a timestamp and encrypted sequence number, not a client public key. C: A requested service is provided to the client after validating a user's identification information and a timestamp and encrypted sequence number, not a client private key. D: A requested service is provided to the client after validating a user's identification information and a timestamp and encrypted sequence number, not a server public key.
