RTA (config)#router rip
RTA(config-router)#network 10.0.0.0
RTA(config-router)#distribute-list 44 in interface BRIO
RTA(config-router)#exit
RTA(config)#access-list 44 deny 172.16.1.0 0.0.0.255
RTA(config)#access-list 44 permit any
What are the effects of this RIP configuration on router RTA? (Choose two)A. the route to network 172.16.1.0 will not be entered into the routing table on router RTAB. router RTA will not advertise the 10.0.0.0 network to router RTXC. no routing updates will be sent from router RTA on interface BRIO to router RTXD. user traffic from the 172.16.1.0 network is denied by access-list 44E. the routing table on router RTA will be updated with the route to router RTWAnswer: A,E*Explanation:Distribute list are used to filter routing updates and they are based on access lists. In this case, an access list of 44 was created to deny the route from network 172.16.1.0/24 so this route will not be entered into the routing table of RTA. But the route from RTW can be entered because it is not filtered by the access list A and B are not correct because the distribute list is applied to the inbound direction of interface BRIO so outgoing routing updated will not be filtered. Distribute list just filters routing updates so user traffic from network 172.16.1.0 will not be denied.
