NEW QUESTION: 4 You configure a SharePoint Server 2010 Service Pack 1 (SP1) Farm. You need to assign administrative rights to the Search service application only. What should you do?
A. Create a search scope for each web application and add User1 to the scope.
B. Configure User1 within the Secure Store Server as an administrator.
C. Add a new Active Directory group to farm administrator.
D. Assign local administrative rights to User1 to manage the farm environment.
E. Add a service application administrator at the specific service level.
F. Deploy multiple instances of the same service in a farm and assign unique names to the resulting service applications.
G. Add User1 explicitly as a Search administrator within the farm.
H. Separate the service applications throughout the farm. I. Add User1 as a Feature Administrator within the particular site collections that require management by non-farm administrators. Answer: E

Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Search Service Account This account runs the Search service. Search service has specific accounts because, by definition, the search service has the ability to crawl all the content in the farm. It's imperative to secure it with its own service accounts. The search service account is input when the Search service is configured. An administrator of a Microsoft SharePoint Server 2010 service application can assign additional administrators to that service application. These users are granted security-trimmed access to the SharePoint Central Administration Web site and can manage settings related to the service application. You can similarly remove administrators from a service application.
