One workstation, sends spoofed packets to a target machine, but uses the address f the idle machine as the spoofed source address. Examination of the idle system's behavior is then evaluated. In order for this to work properly, the idle system must be quiet on its network traffic. The 'Idle" system is called a zombie. The idle system is not a PC not being used because even a PC that is not in use could be generating network traffic. The issue is not whether a PC is in use, the issue is whether the PC is creating or processing network traffic.
