NEW QUESTION: 1Your network consists of a single Active Directory domain. The network contains two Windows Server 2008 R2 computers named Server1 and Server2. The company has two identical print devices. You plan to deploy print services. You need to plan a print services infrastructure to meet the following requirements: - Manage the print queue from a central location. - Make the print services available, even if one of the print devices fails. What should you include in your plan? A. Add Server1 and Server2 to a Network Load Balancing cluster. Install a printer on each node of the cluster. B. Install and share a printer on Server1. Install and share a printer on Server2. Use Print Management to install the printers on the client computers. C. Install and share a printer on Server1. Enable printer pooling. D. Install the Remote Desktop Services server role on both servers. Configure Remote Desktop Connection Broker (RD Connection Broker). Answer: C Explanation:

<http://www.techrepublic.com/blog/datacenter/configure-printer-pooling-in-windows-server-2008> Managing printers can be the bane of a Windows administrator. One feature that may assist you with this task is the Windows printer pooling feature. Windows Server 2008 offers functionality that permits a collection of multiple like-configured printers to distribute the print workload. Printer pooling makes one share that clients print to, and the jobs are sent to the first available printer. Configuring print pooling is rather straightforward in the Windows printer configuration applet of the Control Panel. Figure A shows two like-modeled printers being pooled. To use pooling, the printer models need to be the same so that the driver configuration is transparent to the end device; this can also help control costs of toner and other supplies. But plan accordingly - you don't want users essentially running track to look for their print jobs on every printer in the office.
