NEW QUESTION: 3 An organization has no BPM and only has a "product architecture" with no other architectural view. Which statement is true?
A. The organization must already have considerable insight into BPM solutions in order to achieve this level of architectural maturity, so there is no need to go back into earlier architectural views.
B. Since the product architecture contains all the information necessary to acquire the components for a BPM solution, a deployment model is the only remaining architectural view necessary to implement the solution.
C. Since Oracle does not provide "product architecture," the organization must be working from another vendor's approach, and it will therefore be necessary to start an architectural discussion from the beginning in order to identify advantages in an Oracle-based solution.
D. The organization has probably not thought about the purpose and benefits of a BPM solution and needs help with a broader architectural understanding in order to be successful in the adoption of BPM.
Answer: D
