Server1 has the Mailbox server role and the Client Access server role installed. Server1 has a Send connector for a partner company. The Send connector is configured for Domain Security with a domain named adatum.com. The only certificate installed on Server1 expires. You discover that all email messages sent to adatum.com remain in the queue on Server1. On Server1, you install a new certificate from a trusted third-party. A. Send the new certificate to the administrator at adatum.com.
B. Assign the new certificate to the IIS service.
C. Assign the new certificate to the SMTP service.
D. Create a new send connector that contains an address space to adatum.com.
Answer: C

To enable an existing certificate to work with different services, run the Enable-ExchangeCertificate command and specify the services that you want to enable. You can rerun this cmdlet if you want to add new services that use the certificate. When you enable a certificate for the Simple Mail Transfer Protocol (SMTP) service and the certificate contains a FQDN that matches the FQDN of the local computer, the certificate may be published to the Active Directory directory service. NEW QUESTION: 4 The Orange Book states that "Hardware and software features shall be provided that can be used to periodically validate the correct operation of the on-site hardware and firmware elements of the TCB [Trusted Computing Base]." This statement is the formal requirement for:A. Design Verification.B. System Integrity.C. System Architecture Specification.D. Security Testing.Answer: B
Explanation: This is a requirement starting as low as C1 within the TCSEC rating. The Orange book requires the following for System Integrity Hardware and/or software features shall be provided that can be used to periodically validate the correct operation of the on-site hardware and firmware elements of the TCB.
NOTE FROM CLEMENT: This is a question that confuses a lot of people because most people take for granted that the orange book with its associated Bell LaPadula model has nothing to do with integrity. However you have to be careful about the context in which the word integrity is being used. You can have Data Integrity and you can have System Integrity which are two completely different things. Yes, the Orange Book does not specifically address the Integrity requirements, however it has to run on top of systems that must meet some integrity requirements. This is part of what they call operational assurance which is defined as a level of confidence of a trusted system's architecture and implementation that enforces the system's security policy. It includes: System architecture Covert channel analysis System integrity Trusted recovery DATA INTEGRITY Data Integrity is very different from System Integrity. When you have integrity of the data, there are three goals: 1. Prevent authorized users from making unauthorized modifications 2. Prevent unauthorized users from making modifications 3. Maintaining internal and external consistency of the data Bell LaPadula which is based on the Orange Book address does not address Integrity, it addresses only Confidentiality. Biba address only the first goal of integrity. Clark-Wilson addresses the three goals of integrity. In the case of this question, there is a system integrity requirement within the TCB. As mentioned above here is an extract of the requirements: Hardware and/or software features shall be provided that can be used to periodically validate the correct operation of the on-site hardware and firmware elements of the TCB. The following answers are incorrect: Security Testing. Is incorrect because Security Testing has no set of requirements in the Orangebook. Design Verification. Is incorrect because the Orange book's requirements for Design Verification include: A formal model of the security policy must be clearly identified and documented, including a mathematical proof that the model is consistent with its axioms and is sufficient to support the security policy. System Architecture Specification. Is incorrect because there are no requirements for System Architecture Specification in the Orange book.
