NEW QUESTION: 2 Your company experiences bugs, outages, and slowness in its production systems. Developers use the production environment for new feature development and bug fixes. Configuration and experiments are done in the production environment, causing outages for users. Testers use the production environment for load testing, which often slows the production systems. What should you do?A. Create a development environment for writing code and a test environment for configurations, experiments, and load testing.B. Secure the production environment to ensure that developers can't change it and set up one controlled update per year.C. Create a development

NEW QUESTION: 3 Which of the following statements are true about Mean Time to Repair (MTTR)? Each correct answer represents a complete solution. Choose three.A. It is the total corrective maintenance time divided by the total number of corrective maintenance actions during a given period of time.B. It includes lead time for parts not readily available or other Administrative or Logistic Downtime (ALDT).C. It is the average time taken to repair a Configuration Item or IT Service after a failure.D. It represents the average time required to repair a failed component or device.Answer: A,C,D
Explanation: Mean Time to Repair (MTTR) is the average time taken to repair a Configuration Item or IT Service after a failure. It represents the average time required to repair a failed component or device. Expressed mathematically, it is the total corrective maintenance time divided by the total number of corrective maintenance actions during a given period of time. It generally does not include lead time for parts not readily available or other Administrative or Logistic Downtime (ALDT). MTTR is often part of a maintenance contract, where a system whose MTTR is 24 hours is generally more valuable than for one of 7 days if mean time between failures is equal, because its Operational Availability is higher. MTTR is every now and then incorrectly used to mean Mean Time to Restore Service.

NEW QUESTION: 4 Which of the following roles is MOST involved in checking the quality of the deliverables and supporting the project manager during the project?A. Team leaderB. TesterC. Project coordinatorD. SponsorAnswer: B
