NEW QUESTION: 3Attackers who exploit cross-site scripting vulnerabilities take advantage of:A. weak authentication controls in the web application layer.B. flawed cryptographic secure sockets layer (SSL) implementations and short key lengths.C. a lack of proper input validation controls.D. implicit web application trust relationships.Answer: C
Explanation:Explanation Cross-site scripting attacks inject malformed input. Attackers who exploit weak application authentication controls can gain unauthorized access to applications and this has little to do with cross-site scripting vulnerabilities. Attackers who exploit flawed cryptographic secure sockets layer (SSI.) implementations and short key lengths can sniff network traffic and crack keys to gain unauthorized access to information. This has little to do with cross-site scripting vulnerabilities. Web application trust relationships do not relate directly to the attack.
