NEW QUESTION: 3 HOTSPOT You are designing a SQL Server Analysis Services (SSAS) cube that contains two measure groups named Sales History and Current Sales. The Sales History measure group has the following characteristics: Data changes on a monthly basis. The measure group contains a very high data volume. Queries that use the measure group only reference aggregate data. The measure group includes SUM, MIN, MAX, and COUNT aggregate functions. The Current Sales measure group has the following characteristics: Data changes frequently. The measure group contains a low data volume. Queries that use the measure group often reference non-aggregate data. The measure group includes SUM, MIN, MAX, and COUNT aggregate functions. You need to select a storage mode for each measure group. The solution must meet the following requirements: For the Sales History measure group, query performance must be optimized over data latency. For the Current Sales measure group, data latency must be optimized over query performance. What should you do? To answer, select the appropriate storage mode for each measure group in the answer area.

Answer: A
Explanation: Enterprise Flash Drives Traditionally, high I/O requirements of an application were met by simply using more disks. Availability of enterprise class flash drives (EFD) has changed the scenario. Flash drives, also referred as solid state drives (SSDs), are new generation drives that deliver ultra-high performance required by performance-sensitive applications. Flash drives use semiconductor-based solid state memory (flash memory) to store and retrieve data. Unlike conventional mechanical disk drives, flash drives contain no moving parts; therefore, they do not have seek and rotational latencies. Flash drives deliver a high number of IOPS with very low response times. Also, being a semiconductor-based device, flash drives consume less power, compared to mechanical drives. Flash drives are especially suited for applications with small blocksize and random-read workloads that require consistently low (less than 1 ms) response times. Applications that need to process massive amounts of information quickly, such as currency exchange, electronic trading systems, and real-time data feed processing, benefit from flash drives. Overall, flash drives provide better total cost of ownership (TCO) even though they cost more on a $/GB basis. By implementing flash drives, businesses can meet application performance requirements with far fewer drives (approximately 20 to 30 times less number of drives compared to conventional mechanical drives). This reduction not only provides savings in terms of drive cost, but also translates to savings for power, cooling, and space consumption. Fewer numbers of drives in the environment also means less cost for managing the storage. EMC E10-001 Student Resource Guide. Module 2: Data Center Environment
