NEW QUESTION: 4In the year 1860, the reputation of Doctor Wybrow as a London physician reached its highest point. It was reported on good authority that he was in receipt of one of the largest incomes derived from the practice of medicine in modern times. One afternoon, towards the close of the London season, the doctor had just taken his luncheon after a specially hard morning's work in his consulting-room, and with a formidable list of visits to patients at their own houses to fill up the rest of his day--when the servant announced that a lady wished to speak to him. "Who is she?" the Doctor asked. "A stranger?" "Yes, sir." "I see no strangers out of consulting-hours. Tell her what the hours are, and send her away." "I have told her, sir." "Well?" "And she won't go." "Won't go?" The doctor smiled as he repeated the words. He was a humorist in his way; and there was an absurd side to the situation which rather amused him. "Has this obstinate lady given you her name?" he inquired. "No, sir. She refused to give any name--she said she wouldn't keep you five minutes, and the matter was too important to wait till to-morrow. There she is in the consulting-room; and how to get her out again is more than I know." Doctor Wybrow considered for a moment. His knowledge of women (professionally speaking) rested on the ripe experience of more than thirty years; he had met with them in all their varieties--especially the variety which knows nothing of the value of time, and never hesitates at sheltering itself behind the privileges of its sex. A glance at his watch informed him that he must soon begin his rounds among the patients who were waiting for him at their own houses. He decided forthwith on taking the only wise course that was open under the circumstances. In other words, he decided on taking to flight. "Is the carriage at the door?" he asked. "Yes, sir." "Very well. Open the house-door for me without making any noise, and leave the lady in undisturbed possession of the consulting-room. When she gets tired of waiting, you know what to tell her. If she asks when I am expected to return, say that I dine at my club, and spend the evening at the theatre. Now then, softly, Thomas! If your shoes creak, I am a lost man." Why does the decision made by the physician strike the reader as unusual? A. It is unusual that an unidentified patient would attend the consultation room and refuse to leave when told the physician could not see them. B. It is unusual because we know that a woman would take her time and that, unless the physician were to be considered rude, he would have to hear her complete story. C. Since the physician did not know the seriousness or the nature of the situation with the stranger, it seems strange that he didn't at least find out. D. It is not normally the case that physicians find themselves in a position of helping one at the expense of another. E. It seems incongruent that a physician whose job consists of listening to patients suggesting that the only wise course is to run away. Answer: E Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Yes, it is also strange that the physician didn't at least ensure that there was not a real emergency with the case of the woman stranger, but, had this been the case, it surely would have presented itself as such. That being the case, the unusual element in the actions of the physician is the choice to run instead of professionally and determinately informing the woman she must return at another time.
