new Network Load Balancing Port Rule Port rules control how a Network Load Balancing (NLB) cluster functions. To maximize control of various types of TCP/IP traffic, you can set up port rules to control how each port's cluster-network traffic is handled. The method by which a port's network traffic is handled is called its filtering mode. There are three possible filtering modes: Multiple hosts, Single host, and Disabled. You can also specify that a filtering mode apply to a numerical range of ports. You do this by defining a port rule with a set of configuration parameters that define the filtering mode. Each rule consists of the following configuration parameters: The virtual IP address that the rule should apply to The TCP or UDP port range that this rule should apply to The protocols that this rule should apply to, including TCP, UDP, or both The filtering mode that specifies how the cluster handles traffic, which is described by the port range and the protocols In addition, you can select one of three options for client affinity: None, Single, or Network. Single and Network are used to ensure that all network traffic from a particular client is directed to the same cluster host. To allow NLB to properly handle IP fragments, you should avoid using None when you select UDP or Both for your protocol setting. As an extension to the Single and Network options, you can configure a time-out setting to preserve client affinity when the configuration of an NLB cluster is changed. This extension also allows clients to keep affinity to a cluster host even if there are no active, existing connections from the client to the host.
