NEW QUESTION: 1 Policy documents are developed in accordance to the framework of objectives.A. False B. True*Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 2 You administer a SQL Server 2008 instance. The production server hosts databases for several mission-critical applications. You plan to use the Resource Governor to limit the effect of queries that are executed by Microsoft SQL Server Management Studio. You need to ensure that the following requirements are met: Queries initiated through SQL Management Studio do not exceed 20 percent of CPU utilization. Queries initiated by the mission-critical applications are allowed to consume 100 percent utilization when required. What should you do?A. Alter the default resource pool and set the MAX_CPU_PERCENT option to 20. Assign this resource pool to the workload group used by SQL Server Management Studio. B. Create a new resource pool and set the MAX_CPU_PERCENT option to 20. Assign this resource pool to the workload group used by the mission-critical applications. C. Create a new resource pool and set the MAX_CPU_PERCENT option to 20. Assign this resource pool to the workload group used by SQL Server Management Studio. D. Alter the default resource pool and set the MAX_CPU_PERCENT option to 20. Assign this resource pool to the workload group used by the mission-critical applications.*Answer: C*Explanation: First, you should create a new resource pool and set the MAX_CPU_PERCENT option to 20. Then assign this resource pool to the workload group used by SQL Server Management Studio.Explanation: You can use Resource Governor in a variety of ways to monitor and manage the workloads on your SQL Server system. This topic provides an overview of how to configure Resource Governor and illustrates how Resource Governor can be used. The scenarios that are provided include Transact-SQL code examples for creating and changing workload groups and resource pools. Configuring Resource Governor After you install SQL Server 2008, Resource Governor is available for use but is not enabled. The internal and default workload groups and their corresponding resource pools exist. To create and use your own resource pools and workload groups, you must complete the following steps: 1. Create a resource pool that has the limits you specify. 2. Create a workload group that has the limits and policies that you specify, and identify the resource pool to which the workload group belongs. 3. Define and activate a classifier function that you want to use for incoming requests. When the preceding steps are completed, you can
