NEW QUESTION: 1 The most frequent cause of early postpartum hemorrhage is: A. Retained placental fragments B. Uterine atony C. Hematoma D. Coagulation disorders Answer: B
Explanation: Explanation (A) Hematomas, which are the result of damage to a vessel wall without laceration of the tissue, are a cause, though not the most frequent cause. (B) Coagulation disorders are among the causes of postpartal hemorrhage, but they are less common. (C) The most frequent causes of hemorrhage in the postpartal period are related to an interference with involution of the uterus. Uterine atony is the most frequent cause, occurring in the first 24 hours after delivery. (D) Retained placental fragments are also a cause, although these bleeds usually occur 7-14 days after delivery.

NEW QUESTION: 3 Anson Industries, a vertically integrated producer and retailer of high end audio visual equipment has mapped out its overall business process as beginning with product development followed by product testing then raw materials purchasing then manufacturing and assembly, and, finally, sales and service. Finance staff at Anson Industries are trying to evaluate the efficiency and the effectiveness of each process and the relationship between each process. This evaluation is often referred to as: A. Value chain analysis. B. Benchmarking. C. Process improvement. D. Continuous quality improvement. Answer: A
Explanation: Choice "c" is correct. The process of developing macro level flow charts of business processes that produce products or services and then identifying the value added by each process is referred to as value chain analysis. Choice "a" is incorrect. Process improvement represents the results of total quality management efforts. Choice "b" is incorrect. Continuous quality improvement represents an unswerving focus on customer satisfaction and quality, not necessarily the specific steps associated with value chain analysis. Choice "d" is incorrect. Benchmarking relates to determining best practices and, often, using those practices as standards.

NEW QUESTION: 4 A developer has been tasked to create a method to push a record from the null state to the triActive state without having the action available on a form.
