NEW QUESTION: 2 What functions do routers perform in a network? (Choose two.)
A. access layer security
B. VLAN membership assignment
C. bridging between LAN segments
D. packet switching
E. microsegmentation of broadcast domains
F. path selection
Answer: D, F
Explanation: (1) Intercept datagrams sent to remote network segments between networks, playing a translated role. (2) Select the most reasonable route to guide communications. In order to achieve this function, the router will check the routing table based on certain routing communication protocol, and the routing table lists all the nodes contained in the entire internet, the path conditions between nodes and transmission costs associated with them. If a specific node has more than one path, then select the optimal path based on pre-determined specifications. Because a variety of network segments and their mutual connection situations may change, the routing information needs to be updated in time, which is completed by timing update or updating according to changes determined by the routing information protocol used. Each router in the network dynamically updates its routing table according to this rule to maintain effective routing information. (3) When forwarding datagrams, in order to facilitate transferring datagrams between networks, routers will divide large data packets into appropriate sized data packets according to predetermined specifications, and those appropriate sized data packets will be turned into their original form when reaching the destination. (4) Multi-protocol routers can connect and use network segments of different communication protocols, they can be used as communication connecting platforms of network segments of different communication protocols.

NEW QUESTION: 3 Authorization of a clientless SSL VPN defines the actions that a user may perform within a clientless SSL VPN session. Which statement is correct concerning the SSL VPN authorization process?
A. Remote clients can be authorized externally by applying group parameters from an external database.
B. Remote clients can be authorized by applying a dynamic access policy, which is configured on an external AAA server.
C. To configure external authorization, you must configure the Cisco ASA for cut-through proxy. D. Remote client authorization is supported by RADIUS and TACACS+ protocols. Answer: A Explanation: CISCO SSL VPN guide The aaa authentication command is entered to specify an authentication list or server group under a SSL VPN context configuration. If this command is not configured and AAA is configured globally on the router, global authentication will be applied to the context configuration. The database that is configured for remote-user authentication on the SSL VPN gateway can be a local database, or the database can be accessed through any RADIUS or TACACS+ AAA server. We recommend that you use a separate AAA server, such as a Cisco Access Control Server (ACS). A separate AAA server provides a more robust security solution. It allows you to configure unique passwords for each remote user and accounting and logging for remote-user sessions.
