NEW QUESTION: 4 Which layer of the TCP/IP protocol model defines the IP datagram and handles the routing of data across networks?
A. Internet layer
B. Network access layer
C. Application layer
D. Host-to-host transport layer
Answer: A
Explanation: Explanation/Reference: The Internet layer of the TCP/IP protocol handles the IP packets, the IP datagrams, and routes them through the network.
Incorrect Answers:
A: The application layer includes protocols that support the applications. The application layer includes protocols such as SMTP, HTTP, and FTP, but not the IP protocol.
B: The Host-to-host transport layer includes the TCP protocol, but not the IP protocol. The transport layer provides end-to-end data transport services and establishes the logical connection between two communicating computers.
D: The Network Access Layer defines how to use the network to transmit an IP datagram, but it does not define or route the IP datagrams. The Network Access Layer is the lowest layer of the TCP/IP protocol hierarchy. The protocols in this layer provide the means for the system to deliver data to the other devices on a directly attached network.
