NEW QUESTION: 2 You are a VMware consultant for a large enterprise running VMware vSphere 4.1. You are reviewing the upgrade documentation created to take the company to version 5.X of the software. The upgrade has several requirements, including the following: Minimize the impact to the business applications Do a full rollback, if required, for any issues not foreseen by the project team You notice in the documentation that the upgrade to VMFS 5 is mentioned as being nondisruptive and having zero impact on the technical solution. Is this technically correct?A. YesB. NoAnswer: B*Explanation:In this example, a VMFS 5 upgrade cannot be rolled back without extra scratch space and without using storage vMotion. These things could add extra I/O load on the systems and affect the first requirement.

NEW QUESTION: 3 An enterprise must ensure that all devices that connect to its networks have been previously approved. The solution must support dual factor mutual authentication with strong identity assurance. In order to reduce costs and administrative overhead, the security architect wants to outsource identity proofing and second factor digital delivery to the third party. Which of the following solutions will address the enterprise requirements?A. Using a VPN concentrator which supports dual factor via hardware tokens.B. Implementing 802.1x with EAP-TTLS across the infrastructure.C. Implementing federated network access with the third party.D. Using a HSM at the network perimeter to handle network device access.Answer: B*Explanation:ExplanationIEEE 802.1X (also known as Dot1x) is an IEEE Standard for Port-based Network Access Control (PNAC). It is part of the IEEE 802.1 group of networking protocols. It provides an authentication mechanism to devices wishing to attach to a LAN or WLAN.802.1X authentication involves three parties: a supplicant, an authenticator, and an authentication server. The supplicant is a client device (such as a laptop) that wishes to attach to the LAN/WLAN - though the term 'supplicant' is also used interchangeably to refer to the software running on the client that provides credentials to the authenticator. The authenticator is a network device, such as an Ethernet switch or wireless access point; and the authentication server is typically a host running software supporting the RADIUS and EAP protocols. The authenticator acts like a security guard to a protected network. The supplicant (i.e., client device) is not allowed access through the authenticator to the protected side of the network until the supplicant's identity has been validated and authorized. An analogy to this is providing a valid visa at the airport's arrival immigration before being allowed to enter the country. With 802.1X port-based authentication, the supplicant provides credentials, such as user name/password or digital certificate, to the authenticator, and the authenticator forwards the credentials to the authentication server for verification. If the authentication server determines the credentials are valid, the supplicant (client device) is allowed to access resources located on the protected side of the network. EAP-TTLS (Tunneled Transport Layer Security) is designed to provide authentication that is as strong as EAP-TLS, but it does not require that each user be issued a certificate. Instead, only the authentication servers are issued certificates. User authentication is performed by password, but the password credentials are transported in a securely encrypted tunnel established based upon the server certificates.
