NEW QUESTION: 2Within Crime prevention through Environmental Design (CPTED) the concept of territoriality is best described as:
A. Ownership
B. Compromise of the perimeter
C. Localized emissions
D. Protecting specific areas with different measures
Answer: A
Explanation: Crime prevention through Environmental Design (CPTED) is a concept that encourages individuals to feel ownership and respect for the territory they consider occupy. By encouraging the use of physical attributes that express ownership, the individual is more apt to protect and be aware in that environment. The three main components of CPTED are: 1) natural access control - the guidance of people entering and leaving a space by the placement of doors, fences, lighting, and even landscaping 2) natural surveillance - the goal is make criminals feel uncomfortable by providing many ways observers could potentially see them 3) natural territorial reinforcement - creates physical designs that emphasize or extend the company's physical sphere of influence so users feel a sense of ownership of that space. The following answers are incorrect: Localized emissions is incorrect because it was a made up answer. Compromise of the perimeter is incorrect because territoriality is meant to protect the perimeter and the territory, not compromise it. Protecting specific areas with different measures is incorrect. Compartmentalized Areas would require specific protection to prevent intrusion. Territoriality deals with the protection of the entire facility and a sense of ownership, not the protection of a specific area only.
