NEW QUESTION: 4Fragmentation has a number of potential causes. Identify two.A. Submitting data/deleting data frequently (like in budget applications)B. Deleting member from a sparse dimC. Deleting member from a dense dimD. Renaming a memberE. Renaming an aliasAnswer: A,C*Explanation:Explanation: Fragmentation is unused disk space. Fragmentation is created when Essbase writes a data block to a new location on disk and leaves unused space in the former location of the data block. Block size increases because data from a data load or calculation is appended to the blocks; the blocks must therefore be written to the end of a data file." Fragmentation is likely to occur with the following:Read/write databases that users are constantly updating with data (E)*Databases that execute calculations around the clock*Databases that frequently update and recalculate dense members (B)*Data loads that are poorly designed*Databases that contain a significant number of Dynamic Calc and Store members*Databases that use an isolation level of uncommitted access with commit block set to zero*You can prevent and remove fragmentation:*To prevent fragmentation, optimize data loads by sorting load records based upon sparse dimension members*Perform an export of the database, delete all data in the database with CLEARDATA, and reload the export file*Force a dense restructure of the database*Reference Improving Essbase Performance, Eliminating Fragmentation
