NEW QUESTION: 3What is the BEST method to verify that all security patches applied to servers were properly documented?A. Trace OS patch logs to change control requestsB. Review change control documentation for key serversC. Trace OS patch logs to OS vendor's update documentationD. Trace change control requests to operating system (OS) patch logs
Answer: AExplanation:ExplanationTo ensure that all patches applied went through the change control process, it is necessary to use the operating system (OS) patch logs as a starting point and then check to see if change control documents are on file for each of these changes. Tracing from the documentation to the patch log will not indicate if some patches were applied without being documented. Similarly, reviewing change control documents for key servers or comparing patches applied to those recommended by the OS vendor's web site does not confirm that these security patches were properly approved and documented.
