NEW QUESTION: 1 Which of the following would not correspond to the number of primary keys values found in a table in a relational database?
A. Cardinality
B. Number of rows
C. Number of tuples
D. Degree
Answer: D
Explanation: The degree of a table represents the number of columns in a table. All other elements represent the number of rows, or records, thus the number of unique primary keys values within the table.
NOTE FROM DAN: You can have multiple columns that in aggregate make up the Primary Key, but you only have one PK.
Primary Keys The first type of key we'll discuss is the primary key. Every database table should have one or more columns designated as the primary key. The value this key holds should be unique for each record in the database. For example, assume we have a table called Employees that contains personnel information for every employee in our firm. We'd need to select an appropriate primary key that would uniquely identify each employee. Your first thought might be to use the employee's name. This wouldn't work out very well because it's conceivable that you'd hire two employees with the same name. A better choice might be to use a unique employee ID number that you assign to each employee when they're hired. Some organizations choose to use Social Security Numbers (or similar government identifiers) for this task because each employee already has one and they're guaranteed to be unique. However, the use of Social Security Numbers for this purpose is highly controversial due to privacy concerns. (If you work for a government organization, the use of a Social Security Number may even be illegal under the Privacy Act of 1974.) For this reason, most organizations have shifted to the use of unique identifiers (employee ID, student ID, etc.) that don't share these privacy concerns.
Once you decide upon a primary key and set it up in the database, the database management system will enforce the uniqueness of the key. If you try to insert a record into a table with a primary key that duplicates an existing record, the insert will fail. Most databases are also capable of generating their own primary keys. Microsoft Access, for example, may be configured to use the AutoNumber data type to assign a unique ID to each record in the table. While effective, this is a bad design practice because it leaves you with a meaningless value in each record in the table. Why not use that space to store something useful?
Foreign Keys The other type of key that we'll discuss in this course is the foreign key. These keys are used to create relationships between tables. Natural relationships exist between tables in most database structures. Returning to our employees database, let's imagine that we wanted to add a table containing departmental information to the database. This new table might be called Departments and would contain a large amount of information about the department as a whole. We'd also want to include information about the employees in the department, but it would be redundant to have the same information in two tables (Employees and Departments). Instead, we can create a relationship between the two tables. Let's assume that the Departments table uses the Department Name column as the primary key. To create a relationship between the two tables, we add a new column to the Employees table called Department. We then fill in the name of the department to which each employee belongs. We also inform the database management system that the Department column in the Employees table is a foreign key that references the Departments table. The database will then enforce referential integrity by ensuring that all of the values in the Departments column of the Employees table have corresponding entries in the Departments table. Note that there is no uniqueness constraint for a foreign key. We may (and most likely do!) have more than one employee belonging to a single department. Similarly, there's no requirement that an entry in the Departments table have any corresponding entry in the Employees table. It is possible that we'd have a department with no employees. NEW QUESTION: 2 You are designing a data leak prevention solution for your VPC environment. You want your VPC Instances to be able to access software depots and distributions on the Internet for product updates. The depots and distributions are accessible via third party CONs by their URLs. You want to explicitly deny any other outbound connections from your VPC instances to hosts on the internet. Which of the following options would you consider? A. Implement security groups and configure outbound rules to only permit traffic to software depots. B. Configure a web proxy server in your VPC and enforce URL-based rules for outbound access. C. Implement network access control lists to all specific destinations, with an Implicit deny as a rule. D. Move all your instances into private VPC subnets and remove default routes from all routing tables and add specific routes to the software depots and distributions only. Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 3 CORRECT TEXT Please click the Exhibit button. In this example, _____ percent of the RPC calls are write operations. Your answer > Answer: Explanation: 87%
